

Construction Law

Burke, Williams & Sorensen, LLP is home to a nationally-recognized construction law and litigation practice, representing both public and private clients in all facets of the construction process. Our senior construction lawyers have for over forty years handled complex construction litigation and arbitrations, in jurisdictions throughout California, the United States, as well as internationally, including, where appropriate, mediation and all forms of alternative dispute resolution.

The firm's construction lawyers have handled cases involving virtually every type and size of public or private construction project, from major municipal power plants, highways and bridges, and convention centers, to single family residences and apartment buildings.

Outside of litigation, our construction lawyers have decades of experience and expertise in project funding and procurement, design and construction project documentation, regulatory compliance, risk assessment and risk avoidance, bidding procedures and bid disputes, performance and payment bonds, insurance, claims management, contract enforcement and project administration, and early dispute resolution.
